Video collaboration: Creating a great video collaboration experience starts with an optimal video conferencing camera setup. Position your camera at eye level to ensure a natural, face-to-face interaction, reducing the chances of unflattering angles and fostering better engagement. Ensure good lighting by placing a light source in front of you, avoiding harsh backlighting that can cause shadows and obscure your face. Use a high-quality external webcam if possible, as it typically provides better resolution and clarity than built-in laptop cameras. Keep your background clean and professional to minimize distractions, and consider using a virtual background if your environment is not ideal. Regularly check your camera's focus and alignment before meetings to maintain a consistent, professional appearance throughout your video calls.
